

Yes. After reviewing Coastal Legacy Law, I think it actually fills in some of the gaps that neither Taylor Law nor Atlas Orange addresses. The biggest takeaway is that Coastal Legacy Law is not organized around legal documents—it is organized around life events and client problems. That is a very important distinction.

What I Would Take from Each Website

Taylor Law PLLC

Use as the design model:

- Clean appearance
- Professional law-firm credibility
- Simple navigation
- Traditional legal branding

Atlas Orange

Use as the process model:

- Buyer and seller journey pages
- Educational landing pages
- Step-by-step explanations
- Strong calls to action

Coastal Legacy Law

Use as the content model:

- Practice areas organized around client concerns
- Dedicated elder law and long-term care section
- Special needs planning section
- Educational resources
- Workshop/seminar opportunities
- "What happens if..." style content that speaks directly to families' fears and concerns rather than legal jargon.

If I Were Designing Your Firm's Website Today

I would structure it as follows:

Home

Main Message

Not:

"Providing legal services in North Carolina"

Instead something closer to:

"Protecting Families, Businesses, Communities, and Legacies Throughout North Carolina"

This allows all five practice areas to fit naturally.

Practice Areas

Real Estate Closings

Landing Page

Subpages:

- Home Buyer Closings
- Home Seller Closings
- Realtor Services
- Lender Services
- Closing FAQs
- Request a Closing

(Atlas Orange style)

Estate Planning

Landing Page

Subpages:

Wills

Trusts

Powers of Attorney

Advance Directives

Asset Protection Planning

Elder Law

Medicaid Planning

Long-Term Care Planning

Special Needs Planning

This should become a major section of the website.

Further pages:

- Special Needs Trusts
- Planning for Minor Children with Disabilities
- Planning for Adult Children with Disabilities
- Government Benefits Protection

Coastal Legacy Law does an excellent job treating Special Needs Planning as its own practice area rather than burying it inside estate planning. I would follow that approach.

 Coastal Legacy... +1

Estate & Trust Administration

This is the section I would expand based on your comment.

Landing Page

Not "Probate."

Instead:

Estate & Trust Administration

Subpages:

- What To Do After a Loved One Dies
- Estate Administration
- Probate Administration
- Trust Administration
- Executor Responsibilities
- Trustee Responsibilities
- Beneficiary Rights
- Estate Real Estate Transfers
- Business Interests in an Estate
- Frequently Asked Questions

This section should become one of the largest on your website.

Most people don't search:

"probate lawyer"

They search:

"my father died without a will"

or

"I was named executor"

or

"what do I do when my mother dies"

Those are the pages that generate consultations.

Business & Corporate Law

Landing Page

Subpages:

Starting a Business

LLC Formation

Corporations

Buy-Sell Agreements

Business Succession Planning

Contracts

Business Resource Center

Then create dedicated resource pages:

Secretary of State Resources

Department of Revenue Resources

Business Startup Checklist

Annual Report Filing Guide

Registered Agent Services

This becomes a very useful resource hub for entrepreneurs.

Municipal Law

Landing Page

Subpages:

Municipal Representation

Zoning & Land Use

Ordinances

Public Contracts

Open Meetings & Public Records

City of Thomasville Representation

Town of Denton Representation

I would absolutely create dedicated pages for Thomasville and Denton.

Those pages can:

- Explain the scope of your representation
 - Highlight municipal experience
 - Link directly to city/town resources
 - Improve credibility with potential governmental clients

Resources Section

This is where Coastal Legacy Law gives you another excellent idea.

Instead of just a blog, create:

Resource Center

Subpages:

Estate Planning Resources

Estate Administration Resources

Business Resources

Municipal Resources

Real Estate Resources

FAQs

Forms & Downloads

Seminar & Workshop Calendar

Coastal Legacy Law prominently features educational events and workshops. If you ever conduct estate-planning seminars, lunch-and-learns, Chamber presentations, Realtor CE classes, or municipal training, this becomes a powerful lead-generation tool.

Final Recommended Site Map

I would estimate:

Core Pages

- Home
- About
- Team
- Contact

Real Estate

- 6 pages

Estate Planning

- 10–12 pages

Estate & Trust Administration

- 8–10 pages

Business Law

- 8 pages

Municipal Law

- 6 pages

Resources

- 6–8 pages

Blog

Total:

Approximately 45–55 pages at launch.

That may sound large, but many are short landing pages. The structure positions your firm as:

- A real estate closing firm
- An estate planning and elder law firm
- A trust and estate administration firm
- A business law firm
- A municipal law firm

all within one coherent website.

If you want maximum search-engine visibility and client conversion, I would use Taylor Law's visual design, Atlas Orange's process pages, and Coastal Legacy Law's content architecture and educational approach. Those three together create a much stronger website than any one of them individually.  Coastal Legacy... +2
